

Well SORRY! I know I'm behind on the newsletter again. I'd better watch out or I might get fired -- oh, that's right, I don't get paid. Maybe Jim ought to do something about that?

Kevin and I were sorely disappointed on Friday when we showed up at 10 or so and Vince was the only one left (of course, Jim and Jodi were desperately trying to get him to leave). We'll be there this Friday though. I heard that the corned beef was awesome, and that it was a great time, as usual.

I personally would like to thank everyone who showed up for Brenna's bday party. She said (and I quote) "it was the best day of my life." She was totally surprised and had a great time. I thought it was all right... ok, it was a blast. Of course I always have a good time hanging out with my favorite people. You all are the best. I hope Tracie's birthday was equally delightful. A special thanks goes out to Jimmy for allowing us to use the room at Ed's.

Jodi did remind me of several things that I needed to put into the newsletter, but since my brain is like a sieve these days (I blame the kids, but it's probably the beer) I forgot. I know one of them was the garage sale, which is coming up May 7 and 8th.

Also, Jim organized the purchase of 40 Buffet tickets as well as a bus that will take our sorry drunk butts to the concert. The whole trip, including tickets, bus, and assorted beverages and cheeseburgers, will work out to about $80 a person -- a bargain when you consider what a great time we will be having.

NOTICE: Jodi has requested Good Friday off so she can spend time with her husband. Why she would want to do that is beyond me (just kidding Jim), but maybe we can all do them a favor and at least wait until they go out to dinner before they show up? hee hee. We'll discuss it on Friday.
